Cambodian Mine Action Centre Flag

Significance:

Strength was: 6 - 8 Army Officers, Warrant Officers and SNCOs on 6 month rotations. Estimated total of 40 AO: Cambodia After the withdrawal of the UNTAC force from Cambodia in Nov 1993 In accordance with United Nations Security Council Resolution 880/93, CMAC's mandate is to conduct, and to train Cambodians to carry out, large scale de-mining activities, eventually independently of international technical assistance. CMAC carries out its mandate by providing mine awareness training to the people of Cambodia and by conducting minefield, and unexploded ordnance, survey, marking and clearance operations. In 1997, the shared Power of Hun Sen and Norodom Sihanouk, was broken when Hun Sen conducted a coup de 'etat, ousting the Royalists out of the Cambodian Parliament, making the parliament overwhelmingly Cambodian People's Party (CPP). As a result of this unlawful action by Hun Sen, Australia withdraw its contribution to the UNDP and CMAC in 1997.

BF – 1013 59th Battalion, Hume Regiment Flag

Significance:

Following the end of the war, Australia's part-time military force was re-raised in 1948 under the guise of the Citizens Military Force. The 59th Battalion was not re-formed at this time, however. In 1952,^[18] the battalion was raised again as the "59th Battalion (Hume Regiment)" and assigned to the 6th Brigade.^[19] Marine Artillery was approved as the regimental march in 1953.^[11] On 23 March 1958, the battalion became the first infantry battalion in Australia to be granted the Freedom of Entry to a city when it was afforded the honour by the city of Shepparton, Victoria.^[18] After the Pentropic re-organisation of the Australian Army in 1960, the battalion was absorbed into the 2nd Battalion, Royal Victoria Regiment, forming a company-sized element of that unit.^[20] The following year, even though it was no longer on the Army's order of battle, the 59th was awarded 12 battle honours, which it bore for the 58th/59th Battalion.^[8] Later, 2 RVR was redesignated as the 8th/7th Battalion, Royal Victoria Regiment, and this unit now maintains the honours and traditions of the 59th Battalion.^{[21][22]}
